The Nobel Peace Prize.

The conferring of the Nobel prize and honor upon President Roosevelt in recognition of his services in ending the Russo-Japanese war and as being the one man who has made the best effort toward the fraternity of nations and the prometion of peace since the last distribution of the Nobel prizes, is an honor most worthily bestowed. -

The President, however, because of his official position, is prohibited from possession or enjoyment of any part of this gift and nonor whatever by the constitution of the United States. His decision to convey the. money of the prize to trustees, to be ference in Washington representa-tives of capital and labor for the purpose of discussing industrial problems with the view of arriving at a better understanding between employer and employes and thus promote industrial peace, is a most praiseworthy and appropriate distribution of the money. It is quite Hkely that were he well endowed with material wealth and were there no constitutional prohibition, he would have disposed of this money in just the same manner:he has.

Clause 8 of section 9 of article 1 of the nation's constitution which restricts office holders of the government from accepting any present or emolument, is indeed a wise provision. It is as follows:

"No title or nobility shall be granted by the United States: and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any any present, emolument, office or title, of any kind whatever, From any king, prince or foreign state."

It would not be violating any franks. moral or governmental law for the Congress to pass a joint resolution permitting Mr. Roosevelt to accept the Nobel prize of money and the title of honor, yet in fear that a badi precedent might be established which night possibly lead to abuses and complications in future years, there Clause letters prove it. ought to be restrictive provisions in the resolution providing that President Roosevelt place the money of the prize to a public use as he has announced and that he actually receive the title of honor after he shall have completed his term of office.
